Democratic Uprising Crushed in Burma

The military junta ruling over Myanmar (Burma) cracked down hard on over 100,000 democracy supporters led by Burmese monks over the past week. The government has stated the death toll to be at 9, however many counts from inside the country suggest it could be up to 200. The only internet server in the country has been shut down as well as all text and photo messaging making it hard for outsiders to get a glimpse into the severity of the situation within the borders. Thousands of monks and civilians have been 'disappearing' and now sit indefinitely in makeshift detention centers. The civilian protests began back in August when the junta dramatically raised fuel prices overnight striking a blow to the already impoverished country. Once the monks joined, it became the biggest threat to the government since the 1988 uprising that saw 6000 demonstrators killed.

Strike Bikes in Germany

135 workers in Northern Germany have occupied the Nordhausen Bicycle Factory and in coordination with the anarcho-syndicalist FAU (Free workers union), they are hoping to open the self-managed factory on October 2nd. 1800 orders were required to start production and in the days leading up to deadline, workers were confident that the goal would be achieved. For two months workers have had to occupy the building to prevent it from being dismantled and sold.
